University of Toronto Press Welcomes Two New Academic Journals

University of Toronto Press Journals is pleased to announce the publication of the first issues of Theatre Research in Canada and Urban History Review since joining the UTP Journals publishing program in 2020.

“We are delighted to officially welcome Theatre Research in Canada and Urban History Review to the UTP Journals collection with the publication of their first issues under the UTP umbrella,” says Antonia Pop (Vice President, University of Toronto Press Journals). “These two journals are vital resources in their fields and make a significant contribution to UTP’s long-standing tradition of scholarly publishing excellence. We are excited to share the crucial research published in these new issues.”

Theatre Research in Canada* (TRIC) plays an active role in broadening the parameters of theatre scholarship, through engagement with multi- and interdisciplinary research; studies of specific cultural groups and intercultural exchange; investigations of new and emergent technologies; and explorations of theatricality and performativity beyond the traditional contexts of theatre and drama. The journal was founded as Theatre History in Canada over 40 years ago at the Centre for Drama, Theatre and Performance Studies within the University of Toronto. TRIC officially became part of University of Toronto Press’s Journals Division in July 2020. utpjournals.press/tric

Urban History Review* (UHR), founded in 1972, is the longest publishing journal in urban history in North America. UHR serves as a vehicle for the exchange of information, theories, and techniques relating to the development of urban communities over time. UHR examines the historical development of urban Canada in a broad sense, with particular emphasis on current research on Canadian towns and cities, developing topics and methods needed for studying urban places, and the reliability and interpretation of research materials. As such, UHR aims to bring together the various disciplinary perspectives that exist in the broad field of urban studies. UTP Journals is thrilled to welcome UHR to its program as it approaches its fiftieth anniversary. utpjournals.press/uhr
